The Wyoming Players present the world premiere of “It Doesn’t Get Any Deeper Than This” written by Bridgid Slivken and directed by Dee Dunn. This play is set in a memory support unit of a nursing home and explores how Alzheimer’s disease affects the lives of the residents, their caregivers, and their family members. It is a slice of life piece filled with plenty of humor and pathos. It is a play that most will identify with as nearly every American has been affected in some way, directly or indirectly, by dementia. Many of the actors found themselves struggling as the dialogue and behaviors exhibited by the characters hit very close to home and reminded them in some way of a loved one. This play is educational, entertaining, thought-provoking, but most of all it is a straight-on the mark accurate portrayal of living with dementia.
